

The Incredibly Fantastic Adventures of Fred and The Worm

They rip straight from the pages of classic sci-fi pulp in their sleek, turbo-charged spaceships as they blast off on exotic adventures to alien planets. They're Star Wars, Lost In Space and National Geographic all wrapped up into one thrilling package of dynamite characters and explosive plots. Go ahead: Light the fuse, fasten your seat belt and get ready to blast off with Fred and The Worm as they battle the mind-numbing brain leeches of Mars, the crawling skin fungus of Jupiter and inevitably - each other.

Billions of light years of mostly empty space and somehow, that just isn't big enough.

Fred is a Russian monkey who was launched into orbit many years ago and left to fend for himself. Over the years he has been able to build quite a comfortable life-style from all the junk floating around in space. He spends countless hours contemplating strange, hare-brained schemes with which to torment the Worm.

The Worm is one of a thriving species that has managed to colonize much of the universe. He can play the harmonica and when he's cornered he uses this ability to charm his enemies into a blissful stupor while he contemplates his next move. Friendly, outgoing and gullible. His gullibility, oddly enough, often works to his advantage.
